

This is a very important issue that is not being brought forth adequately to the American public. Regardless of what the American public wants or needs, the FCC decision to raise ownership caps appears to be a forgone conclusion. Freedom of speech and the press may be protected in the Constitution, but as a practical matter it will be useless if those channels available to public discourse are few and tightly controlled by monied interest. My wish is to request that the commission does not raise the ownership caps during the June meeting.
